CHAMPIONSHIPS
2007

Hawaii—"The Big Island"

August 10th-12th

Aloha, Champions!

In 2007, the Pokémon TCG World Champions came from Japan, the U.S., and Finland. In every way, Worlds was truly global.

The final four of the 2007 Pokémon TCG World Championships in Kona, Hawaii, were dominated by Japanese players, who made up half of the final 12 players, including 2007 World Champion Jun Hasebe, 2006 World Champion (Junior) Hiroki Yano, and 2004 World Champion (Masters) Tsuguyoshi Yamato, as well as Wataru Hasegawa, Akira Miyazaki, and Yuki Akimura. World Champion (Senior) Jeremy Scharff-

Kim was the only player from the United States and World Champion (Masters) Tom Roos was the top player from Finland. Australia and Denmark each fielded a player—Andrew Choong and Steffen From—and Canada filled in the final two slots with Paul Atanassov and Alexander DaCosta.

The Last Chance Qualifier saw over 250 players vying for a coveted 26 available slots to compete in the Main Event and produced a strong player in Atanassov, who advanced to Fourth Place (Junior Division). The “grinder” also saw 10-year-old Jake Morgan participate thanks to the Make-A-Wish Foundation, which fulfilled his wish that he could get a chance to attend the 2007 Worlds.

The final battles were as hot as the tropical setting in which they were fought. Hasebe and Yano competed at lightning speed; Scharff-Kim and Miyazaki battled up until the last minutes. Roos and From engaged in an end-match that drew excited cries from the crowd watching the screens that displayed a birds'-eye view of the battle.

In the Hawaiian sun, Pikachu, Chimchar, Turtwig, and Piplup wandered the site, wearing leis. Hundreds of players participated in seven Prerelease and side tournaments; nearly 500 downloaded Surfing Pikachu to their DS's. And by the time the Champions took the stage to the beat of Hawaiian drums, the Grand Ballroom at the Hilton Waikoloa Village was filled with competitors and fans already anticipating the 2008 battle for the title of World Champion....

The Champions' Journey

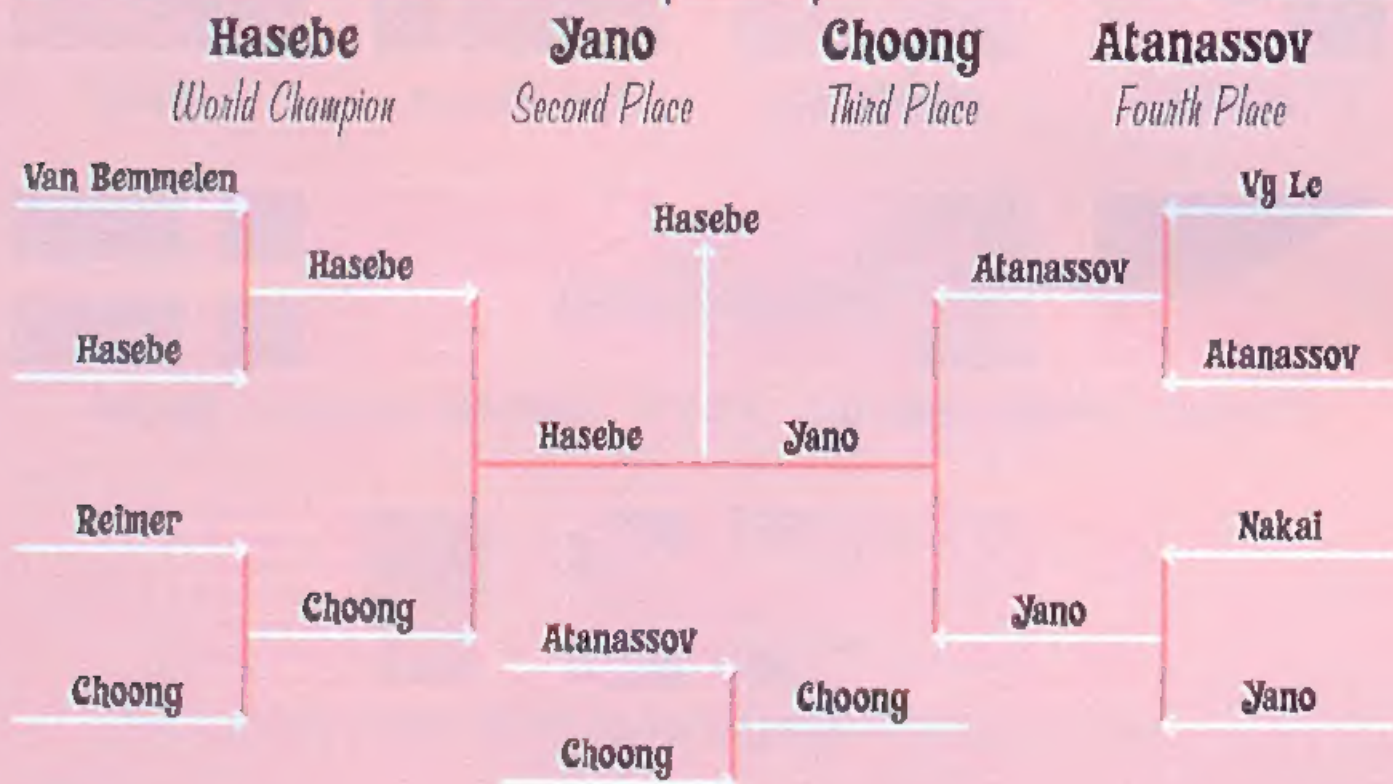

The heat was on... inside the Grand Ballroom in Kona, Hawaii, as the ranks were thinned to the final competitors for the title of Pokémon TCG World Champion.

On Sunday, August 12th, the top 16 players began battling. The clocks on the big screens ticked away the minutes, and when 16 had become 8, 8 had become 4, and 4 had become 2, the audience could watch the rapid-fire final matches play-by-play via overhead cameras.

In each of the three Division brackets are two sets of pairings (four players on the far left and four on the far right) that led to the Championship match (in the middle of each bracket). Below each bracket is the runner-up pairing for the third-place standing.

Jun Hasebe

World Champion (Junior Division)

Age: 7

Country: Japan

Deck: Flyvees

Interesting Fact: Has played since he was only 5 years old

When Jun Hasebe joined Pokémon President Tsunekaz Ishihara on the stage at the World Championships to receive his accolades for winning the tournament, the audience was particularly responsive. At seven years old, Jun merits a great deal of respect and admiration for his skills at such a young age. "I started the game when I bought a Blastoise ex deck," he says, and in the two years since, he has practiced nearly every morning with his father, who was at the Championships in Hawaii to cheer his son to victory.

Hiroki Yano

Second Place (Junior Division)

Age: 11

Country: Japan

Deck: Hard Metal

Interesting Fact: Favorite Pokémon is Totodile... because it's cute

2006 World Champion Hiroki Yano came away from the competition in Hawaii with an unusual memory: most of the coin-flip results in his games were tails. He notes that there's no need for him to come back next year to defend second place—his intention is to return in 2008 to win fast with a deck that will again give him the title of World Champion. Until then, he will continue to practice, playing an “infinite” number of games to prepare himself for the next battle!

Andrew Choong

Third Place (Junior Division)

Age: 9

Country: Australia

Deck: Mario

Interesting Fact: Favorite Pokémon character is Flygon

Andrew Choong says he only keeps getting better playing the Pokémon Trading Card Game. With expert advice and support from his older brother, his deck for 2007 sent him rocketing into the Pokémon TCG World Championships Junior Division's coveted top three. He says the only thing hotter than the competition was the sunny weather of Hawaii's "Big Island." After playing the game for just two years, he admits he will be out to surprise the opposition with a brand-new strategy next year.

Paul Atanassov

Fourth Place (Junior Division)

Age: 10

Country: Canada

Deck: Flariados

Interesting Fact: Plays with a goal of making no mistakes

Paul Atanassov won his semi-final match in the 2007 Pokémon TCG World Championships on the second turn—that made it his most memorable moment of Worlds. He says he usually practices with his brother, who got him into playing the Pokémon TCG less than a year ago. And though Paul had yet to earn an invite, he was one of the players to try their luck at the Last Chance Qualifier and make it through into the World Championships! But it's not just serious competition for Paul—he says the most important thing is to simply have fun.

Jeremy Scharff-Kim

World Champion (Senior Division)

Age: 13

Country: United States

Deck: Rambolt

Interesting Fact: Won using a deck he built the morning of Worlds

Jeremy Scharff-Kim says his typical strategy for winning is to take out his competitors' best cards early in the match. His latest power play is evolving Piplup into Empoleon, which he admits is "...a tank, and hits for a lot." Jeremy began playing the Pokémon TCG about four years ago when his mother gave him some cards, and since then his favorite part of playing has been "meeting all of the cool players I'm friends with now." His most memorable moment from the 2007 World Championships was, without a doubt, "winning the extremely intense finals match."

Akira Miyazaki

Second Place (Senior Division)

Age: 12

Country: Japan

Deck: Swift Empoleon

Interesting Fact: Has played the game nearly as long as the TCG has existed!

Akira Miyazaki tends to favor Empoleon... for this Pokémon carried him all the way to second place. "I modified the Diamond & Pearl Empoleon deck," he explains, "several times." His strategy consisted of scattering damage counters and relying on Scramble Energy. And with a father and a younger brother who both play, he anticipates having more time to prepare for next year's competition than he did this year. Overall, he feels that Worlds was a fantastic experience for him—"the best event," he describes it.

Wataru Hasegawa

Third Place (Senior Division)

Age: 13

Country: Japan

Deck: Empe-gara gara

Interesting Fact: Is good at math
(and “ONLY math,” he says)

Wataru Hasegawa found in Absol ex a powerful ally at the World Championships—after scattering damage counters across a number of his opponent’s Pokémon, he used Absol ex’s Cursed Eyes Poké-Power to move those damage counters around, Knocking Out Pokémon left and right. Undoubtedly he had plenty of opportunities to check this strategy—literally his entire family plays as well. They play every day, he says—it’s a game “everyone can play and enjoy.”

Alexander DaCosta

Fourth Place (Senior Division)

Age: 15

Country: Canada

Deck: ex Tra Supply

Interesting Fact: Has played the Pokémon TCG for 7 years

Playtesting his deck three to four times a week online and at League was how Alexander DaCosta got himself ready to compete with the best Pokémon TCG players in the world. And his game plan—simply stay calm and go with his instincts—was a winning strategy that helped him to be victorious against many tough opponents. That included a win over last year's Senior Division Champion, Miska Saari. Alexander says he realizes there will be many new challenges to encounter and overcome when he progresses into the Masters Division next year.

Tom Roos

World Champion (Masters Division)

Age: 18

Country: Finland

Deck: Legendary Ascent

Interesting Fact: Part of the Finnish team that meets up to 7 times a week

Tom Roos says having fewer players at this year's Pokémon TCG World Championships made the competition fierce. He admits being a relative unknown may have helped him make his way to the final match after not completing his deck until the night before competition. His strategy was simple: he loaded up with lots of Pokémon-ex, each strong against the decks he expected to see. And he says he already has plans for next year—he'll prepare his deck early, as his reputation is sure to precede him!

Steffen From

Second Place (Masters Division)

Age: 18

Country: Denmark

Deck: E-Gon

Interesting Fact: Been to 5 Pokémon TCG World Championships

For Steffen From, playing the Pokémon TCG with his father and friends, including the new friends he meets in competition, is a daily occurrence. He has been playing the game for eight years, but he says next year he plans to push this further and find a way to play even more. He believes play-testing often and being prepared for the most powerful decks is the only way to ensure a victory. And while he really enjoyed playing against the best Pokémon TCG players in the world, it was taking his place on stage that he will remember the most.

Tsuguyoshi Yamato

Third Place (Masters Division)

Age: 22

Country: Japan

Deck: Yamato Spirit

Interesting Fact: Practiced often against members of his Team Achamo (Torchic) to get ready

2004 World Champion Tsuguyoshi Yamato was beaten by an "Absolution" deck (Absol and Eevee evolutions) in the Semi-Finals, but he still considered it a "most worthy match." He made excellent strategy decisions before battling, including adding the Chimchar evolution chain to his deck. He also has a worthy "winning move" that he intended to do if he won the Champion title—a move he does in Japan—but he kept it in reserve when he came in third place. "I will do it next year," he says, "when I become a Champion again."

Yuki Akimura

Fourth Place (Masters Division)

Age: 17

Country: Japan

Deck: Scizor Unit

Interesting Fact: Really enjoys opening booster packs!

Carefully predicting the meta-environment carried Yuki Akimura all the way to fourth place at the World Championships. He had come into the tournament eager to find out whether or not he could play in a single-elimination event. Clearly, he could, despite the challenge of playing the game in English, as Yuki did. After 10 years of play and uncertainty about his skills in the Semi-Finals, he now knows he can compete—and win—in any language.
